can feel like a jigsaw puzzle with missing pieces. Many students rely on generic phone reminders that lack context, leading to “remind me later” fatigue. Choosing a calendar that separates “hard” deadlines (court filings, class exams) from “soft” tasks (reading assignments, networking events) creates visual hierarchies. Color-coding, recurring blocks, and integrated task lists let a student glance at a week and instantly see where the pressure points lie. Sync capability: Align class schedules with personal appointments to avoid double-booking. Alert granularity: Set a 48-hour reminder for major filings, a 15-minute cue for brief-writing sessions. Beyond basic date tracking, a calendar should support the following HLS-specific needs: As part of the Herbert W. Vaughan Lecture Series at
