The CONCACAF Nations League, launched in 2018, offers a structured calendar for North, Central American and Caribbean national teams, and Costa Rica has quickly become a benchmark of consistency within the competition's top tier. By pairing meaningful matches with promotion-relegation stakes, the league reshapes regional rivalries and provides hobbyist fans with a clearer pathway to the Gold Cup. Before the league's inception, many CONCACAF fixtures were friendlies with little at stake, leaving fans and federations alike yearning for competitive relevance. The Nations League introduced three divisions, automatic promotion and relegation, and a direct qualification route to the Gold Cup. For the seasoned supporter, this means every match influences rankings, seeding, and the chance to face elite opposition. Since the inaugural season, Costa Rica has remained in League A, the highest tier, despite occasional setbacks. In the 2022-23 cycle, the team secured a respectable second-place finish in Group B,
