Accuracy here is non-negotiable. Insiders know that the most error-prone sections often involve the discharge assessment details and the reason for ending the Part A stay. Use the MDS (Minimum Data Set) assessment to your advantage; its data should inform and align with the 671. Ensure the discharge disposition (e.g., home, another SNF) is perfectly documented, as this directly impacts subsequent billing and coverage questions. A common mistake is under-specifying the "reason for discharge," which can lead to. Implement a repeatable process. Designate a point person, often in the MDS or billing department, who tracks upcoming discharge dates. Create a checklist that includes: verifying the discharge assessment is complete, confirming the resident's final care plan, and ensuring all therapy notes are finalized. Many top facilities use a shared calendar and automated reminders 72 hours before a discharge to gather all necessary information, preventing last-minute scrambles. Don't operate in a silo. The most effective secret is collaboration between nursing, therapy, and billing departments. A final review by billing staff before submission can catch discrepancies between the clinical record and the form. Some facilities use software that pre-populates fields from the MDS, reducing manual entry errors. This integration not only saves time but creates an auditable trail, which is invaluable during surveys. Proactive management is the ultimate insider tip. Conduct periodic internal audits of submitted forms, sampling 5-10% each quarter to spot trends in errors. The most frequent issues include missing signatures, incorrect
