its website, yet the raw spreadsheet format often lacks visual cues that families need. Parents report three recurring issues: Information overload: The master file lists every district event, from board meetings to bus route changes, without categorization. Timing mismatches: District updates are posted weeks after a change, leaving families to retroactively adjust plans. Understanding these gaps is the first step toward a system that filters, prioritizes, and surfaces only the items that impact a household's daily rhythm. Digital solutions—Google Calendar, Apple Calendar, or the free CVESD app—offer dynamic syncing, color-coded categories, and automated alerts. By contrast, a paper planner provides a tangible snapshot but requires manual entry each time the district modifies a date.
