followed by head-to-head results if teams remain level. The league is split into three tiers (League A, B, and C), each containing groups of four teams that play home-and-away round-robins. The top two in each League A group move on to the Nations League Finals, while the bottom side faces relegation to League B for the next edition. Beyond the immediate reward of a Gold Cup berth, the Nations League table feeds directly into the CONCACAF pathway to the FIFA World Cup. Teams that finish atop their groups in League A receive a seeded position in the World Cup qualifying third round, reducing the number of matches they must survive. Conversely, nations that slip into League B or C see a longer, more arduous route, often needing to play extra playoff rounds against lower-ranked opponents. Clear stakes: Every match influences both regional glory and World Cup chances, so fans can follow a single competition with multiple outcomes. More competitive games: The tiered system pairs teams of similar strength, reducing blowouts and delivering tighter contests. Accessible schedule: Matches are slotted into the FIFA international windows, meaning they're easy to catch on TV or streaming services.
