making it easy to spot overlapping commitments and plan buffer days. Notion lets you embed calendar links, attach lecture slides, and tag tasks by priority. Google Sheets offers real-time sharing with classmates, useful for group projects. Group similar study sessions—like reviewing lecture notes, solving practice problems, or drafting essays—into one block each week. This reduces context switching, a major productivity killer. For instance, reserve Tuesdays 2–4 pm for math homework, Wednesdays 10 am–12 pm for writing drafts, and Thursdays 1–3 pm for lab prep. Identify the 20 % of assignments that will earn you at least 80 % of the grade. Allocate extra prep time to those first. For example, if the final project is worth 30 % of the grade, start outlining it in the first week of the semester and revise it during the last two weeks.
