creates a direct line of sight between menu popularity and spend, allowing finance teams to monitor ROI in real time. Flat-fee model: A $2,000 monthly contract guarantees a set menu, regardless of how many dishes are actually consumed. Excess waste or low participation goes unnoticed. CPS model: Each entrée is priced at $5 per sale. If 300 meals are sold, the spend aligns exactly with consumption—$1,500 in this case—leaving $500 unspent for other initiatives. The contrast mirrors the difference between a fixed salary and a commission-based pay structure: the latter rewards productivity, while the former pays for time regardless of output. Define measurable actions: Identify which menu items will be tracked (e.g., salads, protein bowls, specialty wraps).
